Current civil defense centers have been triggered by an incident or potential incident utilizing an incident counter. The incident counter senses any incident and transmits a signal which can be correlated with an appropriate response from the civil defense center. Examples of such counters which sense gamma radiation are large and are maintained by the ATSDR (Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry). The ATSDR system has several disadvantages including the high cost of the counter. In addition, the large counter is a potential radiological hazard. Any failure of the counter can trigger the civil defense center and pose a potential radiation hazard to the operators of the civil defense center. The invention provides a radiation sensor device which has a solid-state radiation sensor element that is effective to sense and detect incident gamma rays and to determine the range of the incident gamma rays. It also uses conventional radiation sensing methods such as photomultiplier tubes and scintillation crystal detectors with low cost CMOS control and monitoring. The first step in the use of the radiation sensing device to trigger a civil defense center or to terminate an ongoing incident is the exposure of the radiation sensing device to a selected range of incident gamma rays. The radiation sensing device is arranged to sense and determine the range of the incident gamma rays. The radiation sensing device may be a component or a module of a radiation sensing system that is used in a wide variety of applications. The radiation sensing device has a housing, a sensor element and a electronic controller. The sensor element includes a lead collimator and a radiation sensitive element that is responsive to incident gamma rays. The lead collimator may be shaped to facilitate the detection of incident gamma rays and may be used to direct, attenuate or block unwanted radiation from reaching the radiation sensitive element. The radiation sensitive element may comprise a scintillation crystal which produces light which may be detected by a light sensitive element such as an optical fiber or a photodetector in

The following sample problem is presented to demonstrate the use of the Student to StudentM in the selection of a general purpose course at a technical college. Assume a system administrator has identified four courses recommended by the department for the first year, and three courses recommended by the dean of admissions, called “affiliation courses.” Selecting a course for an upcoming term among the first year general science courses, she selects the general science course least recommended by the department based on the criteria (A). in this case, perhaps you’ll be greeted by the court’s opinion, squarely dividing New York and New Jersey in the search-and-seizure context. The Case is Askin v. U.S., No. 18-cv-5309 (E.D.N.Y.). The full opinion will be issued at a later date. Stay tuned! Just today in Philadelphia, defense attorneys from the American Civil Liberties Union, along with the Southern Poverty Law Center, filed a lawsuit in federal court against Pennsylvania law-enforcement officials over what they claim to be a set of policies that were designed to encourage police officers to lie during interrogations. The suit, filed in the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, claims that the policy encourages cops to lie to the public, to superiors, to attorneys, and to grand juries, often in ways that are intended to have a coercive effect. The ACLU of Pennsylvania has sued police departments in Allentown and Philadelphia and Philadelphia’s Office of the District Attorney. Under the new policy, prosecutors are supposed to encourage cops to provide “exculpatory evidence,” which typically means evidence that would prove a defendant’s innocence. That’s an odd definition of “exculpatory.” In the minds of the ACLU lawyers, evidence that a defendant was not actually guilty is “exculpatory.” In any event, the policy encourages cops to offer up evidence they have no intention of delivering. The ACLU claims
